Buick GSX

Q: Greg, what is a 1970 Buick GS coupe worth? I'd love to buy one, and I am checking the ads in collector magazines for one that's already been restored. — Harry, Detroit

A: Harry, I've always had a special place in my heart for Buicks. My grandfather had a black 1948 four-door straight-eight, and as a boy I used to sneak into his garage and sit in that car for hours, dreaming of the day I, too, would become a driver. Along the way, I owned a 1951 two-door Special, which I bought in 1969 for only $300, and a 1983 Park Avenue, which served my family well with 115,000 trouble-free miles.

Buicks also made a strong impression during my high-performance years. Many a Chevelle SS396, Roadrunner or Tri-Power GTO were surprised by the strength and winning ability of the '67 to '71 Buick Skylark Gran Sport line. These screamers, especially the Stage I and GSX, looked good and ran like the dickens.

A friend of mine had one in 1969, a 400-inch Stage I model, and we had that car running in the 12.9-second range in the quarter mile with add-on equipment like Hedman headers, a 3-barrel 950 Holley carb, aluminum intake, 4.33 posi gears and a Mallory ignition and slicks.

As for pricing, a show-quality, fully restored 1970 Buick GSX will run $30,000 plus. Expect to pay $24,500 for the Stage I, $18,500 for the GS 455, and around $15,000 for the GS350. Remember, these are approximate prices, and could escalate or decline depending on the buyer and how willing one is to part with such a great machine, especially those Stage I and GSX models.

P.S. If money is no object, go for the GSX.

Q: I don't usually write to find out information about celebrities. But this time I realized I really want to know this. Is it true that Brad Pitt actually asked Jon Voight, Angelina Jolie's father, for her hand in marriage. — M.L.

A: My colleagues and I say it probably didn't happen — at least not yet. But no one would be surprised if it did happen at some point. Pitt has great manners and would probably feel more at home than many of us if he fell into a "Pride and Prejudice" set. ***

Q: I'm curious about the NBC news personality Tim Russert. Was he born in the United States? I seem to recall reading that he is from Ireland. Also, is he related to another newsman, Chris Matthews? — Sam L.

A: Tim Russert was born and raised in Buffalo, N.Y., and has been a Buffalo Bills fan all his life. He and Chris Matthews are not known to be related, but may have a distant Irish ancestor in common. ***

Q: I recently read that Martha Stewart won't be able to take charge of her own company again. Since she finished her jail term, what's the problem? — A Martha Fan

A: First, Ms. Martha still owes the government some time. But that aside, she was convicted of a federal crime, and one of the penalties is being barred from serving as a chief executive officer. She can still be the brains behind the operation, though.

A while back, there was some talk about removing this restriction. But it was noted that white-collar crimes can hurt a lot of people (remember Enron?). In any event, Martha intends to appeal her conviction. ***

Q: Are they bringing "JAG" back? I read that it might go to another network. Thanks for any information. — Ellie B.

A: At this point, I understand the series is officially at rest. However, "JAG's" popularity remains high, and there are indications that a TV movie may be made.
